Land owners in Ohio today are selling the few remaining majestic yellow polar trees at twenty to thirty dollars per thousand on the stump. Twelve or fifteen dollars per thousand will take the trees from the woods and convert them into lumber. This added to the original stumpage price makes, let us say, forty dollars per thousand. If the land owner wishes to buy some of this lumber he pays from sixty to eighty dollars per thousand for it. Who gets the other twenty to forty dollars Two men living in adjoining neighborhoods in 1910 were selling white oak logs to a lumberman in a neighboring town. One received twenty dollars per thousand for logs thirty inches in diameter, the other received forty-five dollars for logs of the same size, both first grade logs and sold to the same man. Six...
