The most ambitious empirical research effort is the Global Entrepreneurship Monitor (GEM), a 12-year-old program that attempts to measure the level of entrepreneurial activity in a large number of countries. The latest (2010) GEM report, covering 59 countries, defines an entrepreneur as someone who started a new business during the year or who ran a business that was less than 3 1/2 years old and was still economically viable. Entrepreneurial activity is not always a response to business opportunity. Some analysts distinguish between opportunity entrepreneurship and necessity entrepreneurship. In settings where labor supply greatly exceeds the number of paid jobs available, people often start micro and small businesses primarily because few other income-earning opportunities are available to them.
