Original publisher: Washington, DC : Division of Systems Analysis and Regulatory Effectiveness, Office of Nuclear Regulatory Research, U. S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission, 2004. OCLC Number: (OCoLC)243621023 Subject: Nuclear power plants -- Risk assessment. Excerpt: . . . ! How can risk communication skills and awareness be fostered within the agency As noted above, there are risk communication needs and approaches that relate to both internal and external stakeholders. The research described in this report focuses on risk communication with external stakeholders; however, some discussion of internal communication is also included since communication within the agency impacts interactions with external stakeholders. 4. 1 What are the critical elements of an effective risk communication program The best practices interviews conducted for this project overwhelmingly reinforced the principles found in the extensive risk communication literature outlined in the annotated bibliography. We cannot state strongly enough that both empirical research and practical experience in the United States and abroad argue against providing a risk communication formula that technical staff can use to universally explain what radiation is, how risk assessment is done, or what risk-informed decision making is. Furthermore, using the right words does not produce agreement. Public understanding of the scientific aspects of a case does not necessarily guarantee public acceptance or support of the activity (Smith and Halliwell 1999). Even when you have the publics trust, you may still not get their agreement because they may not believe that the current scientific thinking has the final answer (Sjoberg 2001). Instead, risk communication researchers and practitioners alike emphasize that the most effective risk communication programs and initiatives follow these five principles: ! Be committed to an open and objective process that recognizes the validity of...
